THOUSANDS SEE THE GREAT STRUGGLE FOR TURF PRIZE.

the damp earth and rain laden clouds that promised to make the track at least heavy before the day was over.

Weather Spirit Unkind.
The perversity of the weather spirit is a curious thing. For weeks he smiled on the cheap skates and selling blazers at Aqueduct. He swept away rainclouds, averted blizzards, turned on soft and balmy breezes from the south. And now, when real racing is beginning, the skies frown, the clouds weep and a little left-over winter still is scattered about. But enough of the weather. It is left to the use of crying over a more expectation. The Metropolitan will be run just the same. The crowd will be just as enthusiastic.

Up at Westchester this morning every one was astir early. A little thing like the promise of a heavy track and a damp morning does not deter either horsemen or spectators. The stable boys were about at dawn whistling merrily and carrying measures of oats to their horses not carded to race. Everything was spick and span and clean by the time New Yorkers were pottering over their rolls and coffee. Then the handicap division was brought out on the carpet of emerald green.

Over in the grand stand a band of track watchers stood with timers in hand, clocking all the horses that worked, and paying special attention to those of the Metropolitan starters which breezed through the stretch. Not a few owners watched their horses gallop from the spacious veranda of the clubhouse.

The Metropolitan candidates were all sent through the same routine. They were given a good long gallop. Then a fast furlong or a quarter through the stretch was necessary to show if the horse still had his speed.

All this was over by 10 o'clock and the little band of watchers melted away. Some sat about and chatted over the works. The course never looked more beautiful. The infield, cut here and there by the dark brown tracks, stretched like a great carpet of emerald as far as the eye could see. Yellow dandelions speckled the fields like gleaming jewels. The forests in the background, the white roads winding deep into the recesses, made a picture that was charming in spite of the disagreeable weather.

Preparing for the Crowd.
Meanwhile great preparations were going on about the course for the reception of the mass of humanity that was to invade it a few hours later.

Experience has taught the effect of weather upon the attendance, but judging from the preparations he was making he expected a small army. Great mountains of bread, dishes of beef, juicy hams and tempting food underwent a transformation into toothsome sandwiches. There were oceans of sticky stuff that only winners can buy. There were lakes of other beverages, some soft, some stimulating. A peep into the kitchens revealed great roasts and other viands to tempt the appetite. The racecourse is always hungry and always thirsty.

Getting the Ring Ready.
Down in the ring, the abiding place of the meek and lowly bookmaker, John G. Cavanaugh and his assistants were making preparations. There were ninety-one of the Metropolitans expected to be in line, and there was the "dead line" and the "straw line" to be provided for. Also the field was to have its horse of books.

It was no small job for Mr. Cavanaugh to straighten out the kinks and smooth over the rough places. But Mr. Cavanaugh is a master of diplomacy and works in such a thoroughly systematic way that everything worked on a sliding basis. The great betting ring with its hundreds of twinkling yellow electric lights was bare and deserted up to noon. In former years clerks used to arrive early and hold good positions for their employers. Nowadays places are drawn by lot, and there is no confusion and no disorder.

HOW THE OTHER RACES RESULTED.

MORRIS PARK RACE TRACK.
May 3.—The features of the race outside the Metropolitan handicap were the Juvenile Stakes and the New York Handicap. The crowd expected freely and quite as much betting as there was on the big event. A striking rain set in just before the first race.
